Electricity For Pumping -:-

By R. Bedichek, Deming, N. M.

In VIEW of the fact that two companies have recently been organized in Deming for the purpose of generating electric power for pumping, the following remarks by Prof. P. E. Puller, United States irrigation engineer, on the subject "Electricity versus engine power for pumping" are of general interest:

for pumping" are of general interest:
"Much can be said upon this subject, and as it is of interest to present pump or manufacturing district where the power load demand during the day fills in the time when power is not needed for lighting. There must be installed, then, in the power plant furnishing power caps. owners, an effort will be made to com-pare the two sources of power in an im-part-al manner. It will be conceded that electric power is preferable on account of the simplicity of the plant and the re-liability of the power, but these advantages will not offset a material differ-once in the cost of electric over gas engine power.

"It is generally the opinion that electric power should be manufactured and sold at a price nearly equal to the cost of power produced by gas engines if its use is to be considered. This cannot be burden of cost in holding this equipment ready to serve the customer or irrigator. use is to be considered. This cannot be the case, as will be seen, and were it not for the fact that with electric power, labor necessary during the operation of the gas engine pumping plant can be dispensed with, and the incidental repair charge and high depreciation charges elliminated and interest charge lower on the electric plant, it could not be hoped that electric power would compete with the gas engine at any masonable cost.

Cost of Operating.

"In chies of considerable size, the demand for electric current for lighting, occurs between 5 and 10 celock at night and this demand may be for thousands will allow getting over the land quickly will allow getting over the land quickly will allow getting over the land quickly and this demand may be for thousands of horsepower. To supply such a demand, the power plant must have installed and ready to meet this periodic demand, an ample capacity of boilers, engines and electrical equipment which during 10 hours of each day must be practically shut down except for a small demand for operating commercial motors, or day lighting. In shutting down such a plant, the only expense to the plant owners that has been climinated are those of fael and a slightly reduced labor and repair charge. Obviously then, if such a plant can be operated continuously during the 24 hours at its full output, the actual cost for the additional 19 hours of operation, would be for fuel and labor, so that if the power could be sold during 19 hours per day for enough to meet such charges with an additional profit, the price at which it could be pront, the process at a supersection of the process part of the power users shut down their motors between 5 and 10 oclock at night which requirements could not be in pumping for irrigation, because it will be necessary to operate the pumps 24
